It is a volcanic origin island, conical in shape, 122 meters high and 4.5 hectares in area. It consists of benches of nummulitic limestone detached from the mountain called “Montagne des Français”. The islet is covered with vegetation composed of typical Adansonia suarezensis baobab trees and mangroves. Nosy Lonjo is a picturesque natural site, preserved by its cultural vocation. Like all the islets off the northwest coast of Grande Terre (Madagascar), it serves as a burial place for the deceased “Sakalava” sovereigns, therefore sacred. It is also a place of worship for the ancestors through the traditional "fijoroana" ceremonies still practiced by the populations.
